Planning and protecting your estate and valuable belongings can be a complicated process. It is critical for you to understand all the available options you have and identify if your current plan meets your goals.

Unfortunately, most people don't prepare for long-term care because of the cost or the financial consequences that ultimately cannot be avoided. These free workshops will walk you through "How To Protect Your 'Stuff' in Three Easy Steps."

Cordell Planning Partners workshop topics include:

- Qualifying for government funds without losing everything
- No-cost pre-planning approaches to preserving assets
- Trusts: Differences between revocable and irrevocable
- Information on probate, power of attorney, living wills, and health care proxies

Cordell Planning Partners attorneys understand that long-term care planning can be intimidating, especially when facing it alone. It is packaged in complex paperwork and policies that can be confusing and expensive. It also can be a point of contention among family members, as there is not always an exact answer to when long-term care should begin.

“We understand how critical the transition can be as you age, and we are committed to working with you every step of the way,” said Joseph E. Cordell, founder and senior partner of Cordell Planning Partners. “We believe a life well lived is a life well planned. Let us be the difference in your future.”
