

New Partnership Allows High School, Homeschool Students To Earn Credit Online Toward GU Degree

January 23 2020 9:56 AM

GREENVILLE, IL – High school and homeschooled students across the U.S. will now be able to earn college credits online toward a future degree at GU, thanks to a new partnership between Greenville University and TEL Library, a non-profit curriculum and educational technology organization.

TEL Library's College Courses On-Demand program offers TEL online courses, which have been reviewed and approved for college credit by partner universities. Students who successfully complete a course receive credit and a letter grade from the partner university; credits count toward a degree at the university or may be transferred to another institution.

GU's VP for Academic Affairs Brian Hartley said of the partnership, "Partnering with TEL library allows to assist them in transcribing students using our expertise while allowing those same students a chance to see Greenville University in action. This is one of many new partnerships, which allows us to do more together than either entity could accomplish on its own."

Dr. Jae Strickland, Chief Academic Officer of TEL Library, says, "Greenville University is a special place. They have wonderful people, rich history of educational excellence, and we are thrilled to be partnering with them."

Greenville University is a four-year accredited Christian liberal arts school with more than 1,200 traditional undergraduate, graduate, and adult degree completion students. Founded in 1892 and affiliated with the Free Methodist Church, the University is located in Greenville, Illinois, 45 miles east of St. Louis, Missouri. For more information, visit www.greenville.edu.