LARRY WILSON, ST. LOUIS CARDINALS HALL OF FAME SAFETY, DIES AT 82, KNOWN FOR SAFETY BLITZ, TOUGHNESS: Larry Wilson, the All-Pro safety for 13 years with the St. Louis Football Cardinals, died Thursday night, aged 82.

Known for his toughness and the safety blitz, a tactic he perfected, Wilson was a five-time All-Pro selection who played in eight NFL Pro Bowls. He intercepted a still-team record 52 passes in his career, which spanned the first 13 seasons the Big Red played in St. Louis, from 1960-1972, returning them for 800 yards and five touchdowns. His streak of having an interception in seven consecutive games in 1966 is the second longest in NFL history, and in his most famous play, took an interception back 95 yards for a touchdown with two broken hands at home against the Pittsburgh Steelers in 1965, both hands being protected by casts.

A seventh-round draft choice from Utah, the native of Rigby, Idaho worked for the Cardinals following his retirement as a player, mainly in the front office. He was interim head coach in the 1979 season, and moved with the team to Phoenix when they left St. Louis after the 1987 season.

His perfection of the safety blitz laid fear into opposing quarterbacks in the 1960s, and he was elected to the Pro Football Hall of Fame in 1978, in his first try. He was also a selection to the NFL's All-75th Anniversary team in 1994, and was also on the league's All-100th Anniversary team last year. His number 8 was retired by the team, only the second number ever to be retired by the Cardinals.
