The probable cause statement for Schumer reads: Police received a citizen complaint regarding the defendant's house. Citizens reported that three subjects had cut locks to a trailer and were removing the contents. When police arrived, one subject fled in a Dodge Ram pickup truck. The victim informed the police that his trailer had been stolen from work property. The victim arrived at the scene and told police that multiple painting chemical respirators, multiple painter poles, approximately 10 containment poles, a tripod jack, and approximately 25 large black plastic totes all containing different industrial cleaning supplies were missing from the trailer. Police later executed search warrants on the defendant's home and the Dodge Ram that fled the scene.

When police approached the Dodge Ram, the defendant was parked in a different vehicle next to the Dodge Ram. When police told the defendant to stop, the defendant fled in his vehicle away from police. At the defendant's house, police located a breathing respirator, stolen marketing paperwork, a tripod jack, and 3 containment poles, all of which were claimed by the victim. Police also located a stack of paperwork in a folder containing identifying names, addresses, credit device numbers, and social security numbers of numerous victims. Post-Miranda, the defendant stated that he lets Suspect #3 stay at his house, and the defendant knows Suspect #3 as someone who steals trailers and tools. The defendant knew the respirator mask was stolen and he downloaded other people's identification information from the internet to try to "wash checks."
